

State officials discuss parkway design options with public

Construction on parkway improvements could start in 2028

"The New York Power Authority actually owns a lot of the land upon which the parkway sits. It's a combination ownership between State Parks and the Power Authority," he explained.

Tronolone said the original parkway construction was part of the NYPA Lewiston project back in 1962 and its continuing upgrades includes input from the federal government plus state and local interests.

"The parkway itself is part of the state parkway system and was created in the 1950s and '60s," he said. "The (original) Robert Moses Parkway was a four-lane expressway that ran from the Grand Island Bridge all the way up to Youngstown-Porter. And the calls for its removal started within a decade of it being completed."

Tronolone explained the state's corrective actions on the parkway began in the early 1980s with work on the southern segment (phase I) from the Grand Island bridges to Niagara Falls State Park. He said state officials have pursued multiple projects and plans toward a desired removal and reconfiguration of the parkway from 1990 to current day.

A 2000 pilot project completed by DOT reduced the original four lanes of parkway to two lanes, with two-way vehicle access along the southern segment, augmented by a trails system where the original traffic lanes were situated. The second phase in the northern zone removed all parkway lanes from Main Street to Findlay Drive at DeVeaux Woods State Park and was completed in 2020.

From Findlay Drive toward Center Street in Lewiston, the parkway features the one road, two-way vehicle configuration, with a river trail, before switching back to four lanes past the NYPA operations above the hill. It continues in this current arrangement toward Center Street.

Tronolone said DOT has continually studied traffic impacts from earlier parkway design changes and found the traffic impact to be minimal.

"We really didn't have a big traffic movement along this four-lane expressway," he said.

Total daily traffic impact is under 5,000 cars per day. "That's a tenth of what runs of the 190. There are sections of the 190 that get north of 50,000 cars per day."

Tronolone said traffic studies found that adjoining roads – Route 104 and others – operate at an acceptable level of service right now. And even if you added all the trips on the parkway (in this study), you really wouldn't have an impact from a daily commuting (scenario)."

"From a mere traffic standpoint there was never really a need for a four-lane expressway (in the first place)," he said.

As far as phase III, from Findlay Drive from Center Street, consultant John Hubert, project manager of Colliers Engineering and Design, and staffer Kim Baptiste, discussed what's ahead for this section, as three design alternatives from the original six plans were presented.

"Things are all open here," Hubert said. "We're not starting from ground zero; we're trying to build on from (our initial planning). There's a lot of reevaluation that we'll need to do – the traffic, the environmental, the connectivity to neighborhoods, other points of interest. But we're trying to carry forward the original ideas that were generated 10 years ago (from phase II)."

Hubert said phase III does not include any changes on the Niagara Scenic Parkway from Center Street north, telling visitors that section remains in the state's long-range planning.

"I just wanted to reinforce it does not include the portion of the parkway north that goes to Youngstown," he emphasized. "That's not included in this present project."

Hubert said a main difference in the phase III design versus phase II is there are no plans for work on the adjoining streets as was done previously with Whirlpool Street in phase II.

He noted the Greenway Commission is funding elements of the phase III design study and told attendees, "There's no monies identified yet for final design or for construction at this point."

Of phase III, he added, "We're going to be looking at connectivity (with NYPA, Niagara University, plus the four state parks along the route); with the neighborhoods; traffic, points of interest, aesthetics, environmental. We'll be starting with these three base alternatives and building from that and there could be modifications."

Hubert said the NYPA corridor is being advanced as "a separate project. It's been determined (the three traffic lanes over the NYPA dam) are at the end of (their) useful life. NYPA is working on plans to replace the decks on those bridges."

He said NYPA's traffic studies would assist state planners as phase III designs move ahead.

Hubert said the three alternative designs under consideration from six initially presented would involve some use of the existing northbound lanes in a two-way arrangement.

• Alternative 4 – A meandering park road with a partial removal and a continuing trail to Center Street.

"It's basically extending the pilot project (of phase II) and continuing the full length of the (phase III) project corridor as a two-lane road," he said.

• Alternative 3 – Continuing reuse of the existing parkway lane setup from Findlay Drive through Devil's Hole State Park to the NYPA area, then reverting to two traffic lanes to Center Street.

"It's a smaller-scale park road that would not be continuous," Hubert said. "It would run from Findlay up to Devil's Hole State Park, and then pick up again from Upper Mountain Road up to Center Street. It would skip over the
