

Leary excited about NACC's future

sort of organizational level, I think that's happening. We see that in a day in, day out basis. And now, soon, I think our public is going to see that in a day in, day out basis.

Because it comes down to planning. I have a background where I used to plan theater seasons for Theatre of Youth, and we would plan a year out in advance. And I think that sort of prior planning is going to come into the NACC here; and I can't wait to make those plans with our board and with our staff, and to provide the diverse array of things that have been happening here for 20 years, right, but on that more consistent basis. Because I see, much like you see, the only way that we get from A to B is if we do this on a consistent basis, and apply ourselves to that work.

Q: Of course, it was a high school at one point – and there are, I'm sure, pros and cons that come with that. I know when I've taken tours of the building that I've discovered different, interesting places and spaces. I know I've heard that from some of your tenants. Do you think, right now, you have the infrastructure in place to do more of this programming and more of these events? Or, do you think it's going to have to be a combination of do some things, build some things, do some things, build some things?

Leary: Well, I think it's an incremental process, as you pointed out. I think that, obviously, we can get to a certain level with the facilities that we currently have; and then I think that to get to the scale and level of productions that we want to have in our future, whether that be visual or performing arts, I think some of our spaces are going to need some addressing. And I think we are already doing that with our theater renovation process. Our new capital project is going very well right now.

But other spaces that are not necessarily always seen by the public – you know, we've got our gallery space downstairs – that's seen by the public a lot. I think that's part of the way there, and I think there are going to be more improvements coming there. I think the gym is a fantastic space that is underutilized, and we can do stuff in there right now.

But to get to the level that we want to get to eventually, we're going to have to raise some money to do that. And this is where that consistency of having earned revenue streams for this facility coming in on a week-to-week basis, rather than a month-to-month basis, that's where we're going to see the gains for our audiences and for our tenants and artists alike. We're all going to win together.

What we're not going to be able to do is sit here and wait for funding to come in, to then do the programming in finished spaces. I like the idea and the challenge of taking these spaces as they currently are – and they are very usable spaces, as they currently exist. We want to do programming in them now, because waiting is not the answer. Using what we do have to the best of its capabilities, and the best of our capabilities, that's what we can control; and that's what we are doing.

Q: So, for the people who maybe haven't been in the building in a couple of years, what would be your invitation to them to come back, to participate in an event, or take a walking tour, or just find out more about what you have to offer. What would you say to those people to invite them back?

Leary: I would say come start your creative journey here at the NACC, because we want to hear what you have to say about what you think is best for arts and cultural experiences here in Niagara Falls. We have a lot to offer. We've got painting, we've got media art, we've got theater, we've got dance, we've got two different galleries, and two different performance spaces, and a gym that's waiting to be used. And the call here is, you want to do something creative, come do it at the NACC.

The NACC is located at 1201 Pine Ave., Niagara Falls. Its art galleries are open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. For more information on current exhibits or planned event, visit www.TheNACC.org.

Niagara County to hold outdoor career fair at Oppenheim Park

Submitted by the Public Information Officer

The Niagara County Department of Employment and Training will hold an outdoor career fair on Wednesday, Sept. 27, at Oppenheim Park for those seeking employment. More than 75 companies with open positions have signed up to take part.

"Every day, there is another story about an employer looking to fill open positions and how they cannot find workers," said Niagara County Legislator Jesse Gooch, chairman of the community service committee and a small business owner whose company has previously participated in the event. "With 75 companies participating in the job fair, there has never been a better time to find a job, whether you are currently unemployed or looking for a change."

Director of Employment and Training Donald Jablonksi said the event will be held from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in Oppenheim Park, located at 2713 Niagara Falls Blvd., Wheatfield. No appointment is necessary.

"We continue to be overwhelmed with employers in desperate need of employees, and there does not seem to be an end in sight for the demand," Jablonksi said. "Anyone looking for a job, regardless of skill and educational level, should attend this event. There is a broad spectrum of jobs available, and our WorkSource1 team will be present to provide job seekers with services like resume writing and interview prep, as they conduct their job search."
