over a billion dollars in private and federal and state dollars. This Niagara Falls visitor center will be a signature project of 'NY Parks 100' initiative, a $440 million capital initiative commenced in this year's budget over four years to commemorate the State Parks Act of 2024 to commemorate the 100-year birthday of the entire parks system. I'm grateful to our partners at the Ralph C. Wilson, Jr. Foundation for the opportunity they saw here; for their commitment to the park, as well as our community partners."

During his time at the podium, Niagara Falls Mayor Robert Restaino also emphasized the bipartisan cooperation and support that helped bring the project to fruition. He urged lawmakers to continue that trend moving forward.

"To behave in the way in which we behaved in the past where there hasn't been this type of cooperation - this type of ability to get everybody to come together for a common purpose - is part of the reason why we've been held back," Restaino said. "We sit here today on the beginning of another great project here in the state park because people came together in partnership. So I can only say one thing on behalf of the City of Niagara Falls and it's thank you all for your partnership. Thank you for seeing the beauty that is our city. ... We'll do our part to make sure that we continue to improve."

A press release this week from the governor's office said the welcome center is a "signature project in the governor's 'NY Parks 100' initiative," which began in January. In the statement, Cuomo said,

"New York is home to some of the nation's greatest parks and outdoor recreational opportunities that attract visitors from all across the globe, and Niagara Falls State Park is no exception. This new visitor center continues the stunning transformation of New York's most famous and most visited state park, welcoming the millions of tourists who visit each year while highlighting the unique history and beauty of the park and the entire Western New York community."

Construction on the welcome center is expected to start this fall with an opening date targeted for the spring of 2023.
